

Once you enter the core of the science building, you see a long, odd shaped hallway connecting all of the rooms. There is a grouping of black lab tables with chairs to your left, and miniature ecosystems built out of recycled gallon water bottles on your right. The walls are covered in posters from the AP Psych class, each one with a different disorder on it. This is the overflow lab. If you look slightly to your right but still ahead of you, you will see a door with a window in the middle of it. Once you walk through the door, you will be in the main lab. Lab tables that double as cabinets ring the room, each with four stools. The walls have a pair of cabinets above each table, and the spaces between the cabinets have lab safety posters. There are sinks on the walls to your left and right, spaced between the tables, and there is a chemical wash station in the far right corner of the room, next to a large window and a door leading outside. Each station has outlets underneath the rim of the table and a Bunsen burner pushed up against the wall. There are two larger tables in the center of the room, and a TV on the wall above the door.
